Western and Thai soorces said that although some forward elements of a large. Vietnamese force had penetrated deeper than ever before in the seven-month-old war with Cambodia, the bulk of the invading troops were only a few miles inside the border. Hanoi seemed to be using the troops backed by arullery and some tanks and aircraft to find and wipe out Cambodian bor-der units which had been raiding

In denying its forces had invaded Cambodia in force, Radio Hanoi said Vieunamese defenders had driven Cambodian raders back across the border, killing hundreds and capturing many others. Many weapons and ammunition had been seized, the broadcast said.

'Many Regiments'

The broadcast said: "In recent days a big Kampuchean [Cambodi-an] force consisting of many regiments continuously attacked many areas in Vietnamese territory in Tay Ninh, Long An. Anging and Kiengang provinces." The official Victnamese news agency reported Tuesday that "the people and armed forces" of those border provinces bad "put out of action" two invading Cambodian bat-tations and "badly mauled" two other battalions and one regiment. Although the radio said its forces had "buried [invading Cambodian troops] back a good distance from the border line. it said reports that "70,000 to 80,000 Vietnamese troops" had penetrated 30 to 35 miles into Cambodia, were "a completely groundless fabrication."

BELGRADE, 29 (NYT) - First.

Western sources said the Vietnamese army had responded to the raids by moving in force just across the border into areas that Viet-namese troops had used as sanc-tuaries during their victorious war with the now defunct, U.S.-backed South Vietnamese government. There has been much activity around the Cambodian border area town of Mimot, just north of the Parrot's Beak area where U.S. forces had also launched an invasion of Cambodia, the sources said. Western and Thai sources have disagreed about the nomber of Vietnamese troops involved in the most recent actions. Some U.S. officials in Washington had reportedly told reporters for the Voice of America and some other news or-ganizations that as many as 80,000 Vietnamese troops may have participated in recent actions. Diplomatic sources here and in Bangkok were largely skeptical that so many troops could actually have crossed into Cambodia, although they said Vietnamese troops still inside Vietnam may have been carrying out coordinated maneuvers in order to find and destroy Cambodian units operating on both sides of the bor-

Western sources were relociant to describe the Vietnamese action as an invasion since in their eyes that left the impression that Hanoi intended to smash the Cambodian army completely and take the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh. The Hanoi aim instead seemed to be simply to clear out Cambodian forces that have been harassing Vietnamese villagers and troops along the border.

Diplomats in Bangkok said they consider it significant that there has been no specific protest from Cambodia about the Vietnamese action. They said this soggested the Viet-namese had not attempted to establish permanent administration bodies on Cambodian soil that would

West Sets Up $1-Billion Aid For Zambia

By Paul Lewis

PARIS. June 29 (NYT) - The United States and a group consisting mostly of other Western industrial nadons today launched a $1-hillion rescue operation for the financially troubled black African copper-ntining country of Zambia, which is playing a central role in efforts to promote a peaceful settlement in neighboring Rhodesia.

After the first meeting here of the World Bank's newly formed consultative group for Zambia, at which the rescue plan was discussed, Zamhian Finance Minister John M. Mwanakatwe, gave a categorical assurance that the government of President Ken-neth Kaunda will not default on the roughly $1.2 billion it owes foreign governments and banks.

"We will continue to honor our debts as we have done throughout our 13 years of independence," Mr. Mwanakatwe said. This is the third time this month that the United States and its allies have gone in to rescue a moderate pro-Western African country from the brink of bankruptcy. In Brussels, three weeks ago, the United States and its allies offered President Mobuto Sese Seko of Zaire $120 million in emergency as sistance following an attack by left-ist rebels against his country's copper mines, and promised additional aid if he accepts economic reforms worked out by the International Monetary Fund.

More recently, the major West-ern industrial powers agreed to provide Egypt with the $1 billion it needs to avoid bankruptcy this year, after President Anwar Sadat had also accepted 1MF supervision of his country's economy.

These financial rescue operations, for which Sudan and Ghana are widely expected to be the next canadidates, reflect Western concern at the Soviet Union's growing influence in Africa, as well as fears that a world financial crisis could result if developing countries start defaulting on the huge foreign debts they have amassed since the oil price increase of 1973. But they also illustrate an important contrast between the Western and the Soviet approaches to Africa, according to Western offi-cials here. While the Soviet Union can offer developing countries little besides military hardware, the West hopes to show that it can provide get. more lasting benefits by helping them improve their economic per-

Bank Vice President Willie Wapenhans, who chaired the gathering said he is "confident" Zambia will now get the $1 billion it needs over the next three years, although no specific new aid pledges were given. The Zambian finance minister also said he was sure that the "sympathy and understanding" shown for Zamhia's problems "will soon be translated into reality."

Earlier this year, when today: rescue operation was first discussed. Zambia agreed to put its economy under IMF surveillance in return for a $290-million three year loan. Since then it has collected a further $230 million in new aid pledges from the U.S. Britain and Germany, leaving it about $486 million short of the $1 hillion tax

As a major copper producel Zambia has been badly hit by the collapse of copper prices. But UN sanctions against the breakaway regime of Premier lan Smith in neighboring Rhodesia have also cut off Zambia's usual access to the sea, making importing and export-ing difficult. Today's Western aid effort is thos parily in compensa-tion for Zambia's compliance with these sanctions. Bot diplomats here point out that this aid is also reinforcing a government in Zambia that provides bases for most of the black rebels now fighting in Rhodesia and has influence with their leadership in the current efforts to pro-

Both the Eritreans and Addis Ababa have close ties with the Kremlin, which has poured mil-lions of dollars worth of arms into Ethiopia in the last year.

After Defense Secretary Harold Brown said that Turkey has gotten $425 million in the last three years and two months, despite the embargo. Sen. # Intention Denied

South Africa denied any intention of producing or testing nuclear devices, but most experts believe that South Africa has the ability to build them - if it has not already done so. Neither U.S. nor South African officials would provide any details of the negotiations now underway. But informed sources said Mr. Smith was trying to work out an arrangement under which South Africa would promise to sign the treaty to return for U.S. agreement to provide ouclear fuel for South Africa's research and power reac-

While some sources suggested that a final agreement might not be concluded this week, they ooted that the administration's decisioo to send Mr. Smith - who negotiated the first strategic-arms-limitatioo treaty with the Soviet Union the talks. Officials also observed that the Uoited States has some leverage in this affair. And while small countries like The Netherlands. Denmark and Sweden all increased their aid last year, the U.S. contribution was down to 0.22 percent, compared with 0.25 the year before. # Civil Rights Groups Win in Bakke Ruling

By Jim Mann

WASHINGTON, June 29 - Allan Bakke will go to medical school. Symbolically, he has regis-tered a triumph for all white per-sons who believe they have been harmed by special programs giving preference to blacks and members of other racial minorities.

But in practical terms, yester-day's U.S. Supreme Court decision amounted in a number of ways to a substantial victory for civil rights

Although the high court ruled that the admissions program used by the medical school of the University of California, Davis, went too far, a majority of the court also endorsed other admissions programs that give preference to racial minorities without setting aside specific places for them.

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the Jewish group that had supported Mr. Bakke, called the ruling "a significant victory in the effort to end racial quotas in college admissions."
But Joseph Rauh Jr., the dean of tle affirmative-action plans that would be upbeld by the Supreme

Here is a rundown of the way the Bakke ruling dealt with various kinds of programs that give preferences on the basis of race:

University admissions: By rul-

However, a majority of the court approved the more moderate form of racial preference used by Harvard College in its admissions pro-

In a friend-of-the-court brief, in which it was joined by Stanford, Columbia and the University of Pennsylvania, Harvard described its admissions program:

The four who concluded that universities cannot take race into account - Justices John Paul Stevens, Potter Stewart, William Rehnquist and Chief Justice War-ren Burger — did not discuss school desegregation in their joint opinion supporting Mr. Bakke.

And Jusce Powell said he thought that the Bakke case did not apply. "[Bakke's] position is wholly dissimilar to that of a pupil bused from his neighborhood school to a comparable school in another neighborhod..." he wrote. "[The university] did not arrange for [Bakke] to attend a different medi-cal school in order to desegregate Davis Medical School; instead, it denied him admission and may have deprived him altogether of a medical education."

 Employment: Generally, the decision will not disturb those affirmative-action programs by em-ployers that give members of racial minorities preferences on the basis

Once again, four members — Justices Brennan, Marshall, White and Blackmun — said that they believe employers may even go so far as to use quotas as a means of helping minorities overcome discrimi-nation in employment.

But Justice Powell appeared to imply in his opinioo that in later court cases he may approve the use of racial preferences in hiring. He quoted approvingly from several lower court decisions in which private employers were required to hire members of racial minorities.

 Government programs: The Commerce Department gives spe-cial grants to businesses owned by members of racial minorities. The National Science Foundation gives money for science education and money for science education and training to schools with enrollments that are more than half black or Spanish-speaking. These are merely examples of the wide range of programs in which the U.S. government deliberately aids minority groups.

Mr. Bell said that be has been told there are 100 such U.S. programs. He could not think of one that will be overturned by the Bakke decision, he said.

 Construction: In several places across the country, white contrac-tors have filed suit charging that their rights have been violated by a U.S. law requiring that 10 percent of the money on all public-works construction projects be set aside for minority contractors. The Bakke ruling gave no guidance on the validity of this law.

Who Won?

Bakke "won." The admissions office of a California medical school "lost." But Americans determined to repair a history of dis-Crimination gained the blessing of the Supreme Court to let race and ethnicity count in programs of "affirmative action."

Everything, in short, depends on how the nation responds to this anxiously contested decision. If blacks and other deprived groups jump to the conclusion that "the white guy" prevailed again, grave damage will have been done. If prejudiced or grudging whites in responsible positions read only that racial and ethnic "quotas" have been ruled unconstitutional, discrimination will find new havens. But if the will to remedy historic injustice is still widely felt, the court has left us the means to work on loward the American

We would have preferred a less contorted legal statement from the court. Many Americans have been satisfied to grant a measure of legal equality while wearying of the more difficult effort to obtain genuine social and economic opportunity for minorities. Many others have used the legitimate concern about standards of merit and "reverse discrimination" to preach contentment with only a formal equity. Too many of these will find sustenance in the 150 pages of crisscrossed Bakke opinions.

It is crucial, therefore, to keep the essential statement of the entire court clearly in view. Five justices ruled that an institution may constitutionally give great weight to race or ethnicity in distributing a social good like admission to a medical school. The remaining four justices kept silent on this point, judging the case without reaching the Constitution. Affirmative action can proceed, with due regard for the fine line the court has drawn: minorities may be helped through the doors of opportunity but not through a separate door that is racially reserved for them alone.

How to draw that line between justifiable remedy and unjustifiable racism was the essential problem before the court. It divided more or less as thoughtful opinion around the country has been divided hy it. The debate is healthy and will long continue. The only danger is that petty readings of this case will obstruct the unfinished business of spreading opportunity to all Americans. Allan Bakke was not the issue in the case that bears his name. He had failed, perhaps unjustly and perhaps because of his age (now 38), to gain admission to 10 medical schools. despite worthy credentials. At the medical school of the University of California at Davis, he encountered a two-track admission system in which 16 of 100 places were effectively reserved for blacks. Chicanos and Asians. Feeling cheated of access to those 16 places, he sued.

It is this crudely labeled separate doorway for minorities that the court found unjustifiable at an institution where there had been no previous discrimination. But the pivotal opinion of Justice Powell explicitly held up as desirable the less gross admissions program of Harvard College, where special weight is given to race and ethnic origin for the purpose of extending opportunity to a broader range of Americans. He perceived a great constitutional distinction between Davis and Harvard; four essentially like-minded colleagues did not.

So nothing will have been lost if the Harvard way becomes the nation's way. As Justice Blackmun wrote, from the side of the precarious majority endorsing racial classification, "In order to get beyond racism we must first take account of race, And in order to treat some persons equally, we must treat them differently. The ultimate question, as it was at the beginning of this litigation, is:

Among the qualified, how does one choose?" The ultimate answer remains: With con-

Soviet Insecurity

If "slander" in the Soviet sense of the word is now going to hang as a legal sword over the heads of Western correspondents in the Soviet Union, fair and full reporting on Soviet society will soon become impossible. And if the Soviet government has really thought through the implications of this new policy, then even more serious speculation is in order about the present course of that society.

To threaten correspondents with fines and jail for what they write - for non-Soviet readers - is to attempt to extend the laws of Soviet totalitarian society to the free institutions of the West. Forget Helsinki and all the pious pledges about facilitating the flow of information and ideas. This kind of bullying will make reporting from Moscow either wholly suspect or useless. It will invite retaliation against Soviet correspondents. It will ruin other forms of communication. It will further endanger relations.

Our concern goes beyond The New York Times's obvious interest in this matter. One of our correspondents in Moscow, Craig Whitney, and Harold Piper of The Baltimore Sun, were summoned to a civil court Wednesday morning by the State Committee for Radio and Television to face a suit for "slander." The charge, as they understand it, is that they bear responsibility for the views of persons they interviewed during a visit to Soviet Georgia, Those persons challenged the authenticity of a televised confession by a convicted Georgian political dissenter and the state committee presumably feels officially libeled. It seeks relief by a published retraction as well as punishment of the correspondents.

Suits of this kind cannot be brought in the Soviet Union without the knowledge and consent of the highest government authorities. Those authorities have been particularly aggrieved in recent years by the access that Western reporters have had to political dissenters, who have risked severe punishment

It is conceivable that these dissenters are in fact the intended targets of the Soviet action and that the new policy of intimidation strikes only incidentally at Western reporters. But whatever its motives, this Soviet move is a step backward toward the darkest hours of the cold war. It is an act of fear and insecurity by a global power that purports to be unafraid of peaceful competition. which surely includes the most elementary contact with the rest of the world. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Concord on the Concorde

Though the battle of Concorde has ended in defeat for its opponents, it foreshadows a significant victory in the war against airport noise - for we doubt that any aircraft manufacturer will be eager to gamble and struggle the way the British and French have had to in the United States. Besides, the approval announced by Transportation Secretary Brock Adams isn't exactly a supersonic red carpet for every booning aircraft of the future. On the contrary, it is restricted to the 16 Concordes that either have been built or are under construction.

Moreover, the ruling forbids Concorde from flying at supersonic speeds and thus creating supersonic booms over any part of the nation; and a curfew continues on Concorde flights between 10 p.m. and 7 a.m.

The action does open 11 more airports to Concorde, which has been flying a total of 17 round trips a week to Kennedy Airport in New York and six round trips to Dulles Airport outside Washington. But Mr. Adams notes that these local airports could, if they wished, adopt "reasonable nondiscriminatory" noise rules that would keep out the Concorde. That seems fair enough at this point, especially since the real setback to anti-noise more than two years. So any Concordes of the future at least will have to meet noise standards that were set for subsonic planes in 1969. They should be held to the stricter standards that were set for subsonic planes in 1975, but there's still time to get back to that. For now, at least, the Concorde has permission to fly, which is by no means a guarantee of financial success: so far, it's been a money-loser, which in the long run may be the most effective noise curb of

Whither French Socialism?

By Norman Jacobs

PARIS — French Socialists are experiencing their own time of troubles in the wake of the Union of the Left's defear in March's legislative elections. In assessing the lessons of that defeat and debating the shape of its future, the Socialist Party must cope with the problem of maintaining internal unity while reaching agreement on a program acceptable to the different groups that compose it.

Officially, the Socialist Party is divided into a majority and a minority, with proportional representation of both in its elected bodies. But the majority is further subdivided into a coalition of three groups whose respective leaders are Francois Mitterrand, Michel Rocard and Pierre Maurov.

Estimates of the relative numeri-cal strength of these groups are dif-ficult to ascertain with any preci-sion. As the acknowledged leader of the party. Mitterrand of course has a decisive voice on most issues. but his following is largely a perbrilliance is widely acknowledged. observers doubt that he could muster as much as 20 percent of the party's members behind him. Mauroy talong with Gaston Defferre) controls the party's largest work-ing-class battalions. These were inherited from the old SFIO in which Mauroy was prominent and which provided the rank-and-file core of the present-day Socialist party. On the other hand, the strength of the official pany minority, known as CERES, can be estimated with relative accuracy, since it is reflected in yotes on which the majority and minority have divided in the past. CERES, led by Jean-Pierre Chevenement, is credited with controlling some 25 percent of the party's 160,000 members.

Differences

In the program debates now going on within the party, differences between the majority appear. paradoxically, less wide than those existing within the groups forming the majority. CERES occupies the far left of the party spectrum. The uncompromising fee of any social democratic orientation, it has a class-conscious approach to social analysis, and in a more or less orthodox Marxist tradition advocates a complete break with capitalism and its replacement by a planned economy. CERES sees the road to power as possible only through cooperation with the Communists and therefore strongly advocates reinvigoration of the now somewhat defunct Union of the Left. In foreign policy, if CERES is hostile to Soviet totalitarianism, which it deems a betrayal of socialism, it is no friend of the United States. which it regards as the bulwark of world imperialism.

Rocard and his supporters occu-py a different pole in the socialist political constellation. Rocard is best known for his advocacy of "autogestion" or workers' self-managenient in industry, which he con-Irasis with the centralizing, statist. nationalist and protectionist tradi-tions of the French left. More than any of his rivals. Rocard has shown a greater appreciation of the role of the market place in the workings of the modern economy. In the Socialist Party Congress held in Nantes last year, Rocard noted that every Socialist experiment that has resulted in eliminating the play of mar-ket forces ended up developing bu-requeratic economics. And he warned that were the French Socialists to adopt a program that did away with the free market, its effons to build socialism would be doomed to failure. Chevenement has vigorously denounced Rocard's views as the prescription for a ocial-democratic socialism

To locate the positions of Mitterrand and Mauroy with respect to those of CERES and Rocard is not easy. There can be no question, nonetheless, that Mitterrand is a good deal closer to CERES than to Rocard. As for Mauroy, his SFIO heritage is a social-democratic one: but his ultimate approach will probably be influenced by considerations involving the struggle for leadership in the party as Mitterrand's reign draws to an end as much as by his social philosopby. With some simplification, per-haps, it can be said that the Socialist Party must choose between two program options. One points in the traditional Marxist direction and would seek to end the "exploitation of man by man" by substituting a planned economy for eapitalist free enterprise. The other, the social democratic approach, would retain the market along with a large if not dominant private sector and would seek to achieve social justice through redistributive legislation and to democratize the operation of the private sector through various forms of autogestion. The ultimate choice the Socialists make will very largely determine their external alliances and influence their electoral prospects. For if, as Francois Mitterrand repeatedpoints out, the Socialist Party has become the leading party of the left in terms of popular support. that support — around 23 percent of the total in the first round of the legislative elections — is far from sufficient to enable it to come to power on its own. To win an election, the Socialists need allies on their left or right. Under Mitter-rand's leadership, the party is likely to opt, as it has opted in the recent past, for alliance with the Communists and for a program that is more traditionally Marxist in its emphasis than social democratic.

Choice

The choice of such an orientation raises a number of questions. Can the program it embodies win the support of a majority of the French people? The evidence is unclear despite the fact that the left's defeat lass March has been primarily at-tributed to the distinity prevailing in the Union of the Left. The distrust by major segments of the French population of a collectivist orientation and their deep scepti-cism regarding the democratic bona fides of the Communists warrant at least some doubt that the left would bave won the elections even if united. And there is an equally important related question: Will the Communists ever loyally accept partnership in a coalition in which the Socialists are the dominant partner, a condition that appears to be a sine qua non of a viciory for the left?

Serious difficulties of another kind arise if the Socialist Party chooses to pursue a social democratic orientation. For then it must seek alliance with parties of the French center and center-left like those currently gathered together in the Union for French Democracy. President Valery Giscard d'Estaing might well welcome such a coalition, for it would permit him to achieve his goals of reconciling the French people with each other and of diminishing social inequalities while freeing his government from dependence on Gaullist support. It is highly tikely, moreover, that a coalition of this sort would elicit the support of a majority of the French people who, opinion polls have frequently shown, desire social reform without a sharp tearing of the fabric of existing institutions.

Which way then for French Socialism? The choice it ultimately makes is a fateful one for the future of the party. . . and of France.

Socialisi-center governments under the Fourth Republic, when efforts at reform were submerged by the imperatives of cold-war politics and a government led by the party's leader, Guy Mollet, waged a tolonial war in Algeria it had come to office promising to bring to an end. Those are the main conclusions that emerge from the Supreme Court's multiple opinions in the case of Allan Bakke. They are conclusions of fundamental importance.

All along, the great risk in the Bakke case bas been that the Supreme Court would lay down some rigid rule, consulutional or statutory. It might, for example, have absolutely forbidden any consideration of more in admissions rollings. tion of mee in admissions policies — and by implication in other areas. That was what the California courts did in the Bakke case itself. The Supreme Court reversed that absolute decision.

Curious

A majority of the Supreme Court agreed that Bakke himself had been unlawfully excluded from the University of California Medical School at Davis. A curious combination of opinions produced that result, and the public may well find the confusing But the arithmetic of is confusing. But the arithmetic of the nine justices' views is not really that hard to follow, and the result in a way does satisfy a common sense of what is right.

The Davis affirmative action program set aside 16 of 100 places in each entering class for minority students. Minority applicants could seek these places or the 84 in the regular admissions program. Bakke, who is white, could not compete for the 16.
Four justices (Stevens, Chief Justice Burger, Siewart and Rehn-quist) found that Bakke had been quist) found that Bakke had been treated unlawfully under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which forbade discrimination "on the ground of race" in federally-aided programs. They read the act as requiring "color-blind" policies. Slevens' opinion. strangely crabbed in tone, said the statute was decisive and bence refused to consider the constitutional question.

Another four (Justices Brennan, White, Marshall and Blackmun), quoting other portions of the legis-lative history, said the 1964 act was designed to help minorities and did not outlaw affirmative action programs. They said it meant exactly the same thing as the constitutional promise that no one shall be denied the equal protection of the laws."

Long History

These four also found the Davis program constitutional. Given the long history of racism in this country, they said, a university was endtled to use such means to remedy "the past effects of societal discrimination itself." Otherwise, they said, "color blindness" would be come "myopia which masks the reality that many created equal have been treated within our lifetimes as inferior hoth by the law and by their fellow citizens."

their fellow citizens.

The ninth vote was east by Justice Powell. He agreed that the Civil Rights Act did not rule out the Davis program — so that contention lost by a vote of 5 to 4. As to the Constitution. Justice Powell found that Mr. Bakke's rights had been violated because the Davis program set up an unjustified racial program set up an unjustified racial classification. That made the fifth vote requiring Mr. Bakke's admis-

But Justice Powell said that uni-versities could consider race as a factor in flexible admissions programs. He cited as "an illuminating example" the Harvard admissions plan, which seeks a diverse student body by giving advantage to appli-cants from "disadvantaged eco-nomic, racial and ethnic groups." The Harvard plan also considers, Justice Powell said, such personal qualities as "unique work or service experience, leadership potential, maturity, demonstrated compas-

Justice Powell said state universi-iles could not have as an objective the remedying of "societal discrimination" at large. But in a signifi-cant passage he cited lower-court cases upholding racial standards for employment and construction contracts where the industries affected were themselves found to have discriminated.

Decisive

The Powell view, which at least for the moment is decisive, plainly leaves scope for effective programs, Harvard, for instance, used to have only a handful of minority students, Under its present admissions policy, which he praised, 8.1 percent of those admined for next fall's freshman class are black, 4.6

percent Hispanic.
To analyze the Bakke decision in these cold terms does not do justice to what actually happened in the courtroom. I have seen great moments there, but nothing to match the drama as five members of the Court explained their posi-uons in homely terms.

"It will be evident from our several opinions," Justice Powell said, that the case, intrinsically difficult, has received our most thoughtful attention over many months."
That modest note underlined the unique quality of what the U.S. Supreme Court does often and did in this case grapple with the funda-mentals of a society. "In the end." Justice Frankfurter said 20 years ago. "judgment cannot he escaped — the judgment of this Court."

U.S. Tax Policy

Sometimes congressional commitlees move in even more mysterious ways than is their custom. # An Expanded Veterans Aid Bill Passes House, 398-5

WASHINGTON, June 29 (WP)

— The current Capitol Hill fad for cutting spending stops dead when it comes to veterans benefits as the House proved yesterday by passing a veteran-pension bill that would increase the program's cost by about $40 billion during the next 20 years.

As Rep. John Hammerschmidt, R-Ark., said during debate yester-day on another bill increasing veterans' benefits. Congress has "al-ways expressed a willingness and even eagerness" to vote for veterans

The only opposition to the bill came from Rep. Glenn Anderson.
D-Calif., who thought that the bill's bonus for World War I veterans, $67 a month extra for each veteran over 80 years old, was not generous enough, Anderson wanted to give the 720,000 World War I veterans, their widows and children $160 a WASHINGTON, June 29 (API A House committee is giving President Carter a major victory on his civil-service revision plan by unexpectedly approving his contro-versial phase-down of the lifetime job preference given to veterans.

The 16-9 vote came on a compremise put forth by Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., after months of intense lobbying on the issue by the administration, major veterans groups and women's and civil-rights groups.

Commerce Department figures show that last year fringe benefits accounted for $166.3 billion, or 14.4 percent of the $1.15 trillion in wages and other compensation paid American workers. In 1967, they were only 9.4 percent.

MONTE CARLO. June 29 (IHT) — The bells rang and the sun shone when Princess Caroline came out of the Grimaldi Palare today on the arm of her husband, Philippe Junot.

The square was crowded with people, mostly tourists, who started arriving as early as 9 a.m. There were security forces everywhere.

Princess Caroline wore a simple. beautiful white embroidered organ-dy dress by Dior, of a classic shape high-necked, long-sleeved and belted over a full swirling skin. Her face was framed by two rounded hair ornaments made of white silk flowers (by Alexandrel that held her short veil.

Walk Begins

As the couple began their walk up the narrow Rue Gastaldi, leading to the Town Hall, people started applauding, and the parents made an appearance at the win-dows of the palace.

The cases and curio shops, as well as the square, were decorated with French and Monacun flags and many windows had pictures of the couple. People were lined all along the way to the Town Hall square, cheering and applauding. The princess dropped her bouquet on the altar of the Virgin at the Chapel of Mercy, then crossed the street to the Town Hall to sign the register, receive the congratulations from the mayor and the Monegasque population's present of a chest of silverware. DARIS. June 29 (IHT) - Unlike New York or London, Paris has seen almost nothing of the cele-hrated Stuttgart Ballet, so it was no wonder that the seats and stairways of the Theatre de la Ville were packed as the company gave a panoramic view of its repertory - four programs encompassing 13 works during its two-week stand.

Perhaps for this reason there was much more emphasis here on the ballets of John Cranko - the company's founder and creative spirit from 1961 until his death in 1973 - than io London, where the troupe recently made its third visit in four years [IHT. June 7).

The six Cranko works in Paris were varied, including the relatively early "Opus 1" (1965, to Webern's music): "Legende" (1972), a show-piece pas de deux for Marcia Haydee and Richard Cragun set to a Wieniawski violin showpiece, and two major works, "Brouillards," a string of wry vignettes to Debussy's piano preludes, and "Initials R.B.M.E.," Cranko's romantic celebration of friendship for his four leading dancers.

The heart of the work is a ballet within a ballet in which a group of dancers representing Galileo's discovery disrupts the world of the pope, the Medici and their followers - the latter represented by a parody of figures from romantic ballet, a dubious analogy and not a particularly dramatic one. The pope (Carl Morrowi got the danc-ing plum, a convulsive solo that must have been the balletic equivalent of an excommunication threat. while Reid Anderson did his dignified best to depict the scientist's

Mr. Buhari did not comment on the alleged discounting of official prices. A key grade of Nigerian crude oil, for example, has been officially reduced in price since earlier this year to $14.12 a barrel from $14.32. Industry sources claim there have been further, unofficial. discounts ranging up to 17 cents a barrel. But he did say the official reductions in the second quarter have helped bring about an apparent turnaround in Nigeria's oil output, which has been as high as two million barrels a day. Output fell to slightly below 1.6 million barrels a day in March but currently is nearing 1.8 million barrels a day.

Exports are planned to rise to more than one MBD from the pres-

Mr. Carter and Energy Secretary A Long-Term Record

By John H. Allan NEW YORK, June 29 (NYT) -

The government yesterday sold $1.75 billion in 15-year bonds that will carry an interest rate of 8% percent, the highest coupon the Treas-ury bas ever put on a long-term bond issue in the 188 years it has been in existence. Treasury bonds have often yield-more in the secondary market, and shorter-term government securities have also yielded more. The Treasury in 1974 sold three-month bills at a peak rate of 9.908 percent, and it also sold six-year 9-percent notes that year. Until now, however, the peak rate for long-term Treasury bonds has been 812 percent, the coupon set on an issue of 25-year bonds sold in 1974.

In its financing yesterday, the Treasury reported that the average yield in its auction came to 8.63 percent. a rate somewhat lower than the 8.65-to- 8.70 percent range that securities dealers had been predicting. The Treasury accepted bids ranging in yield only from 8.62 to 8.63 percent, and it accepted 93 percent of the bids made at the gher mie

Avoid U.S. Safety, Pollution Rules, Costs

'Dirty' Industries Export Plant

WASHINGTON, June 29 (WP) - Many hazardous and polluting U.S. industries are "exporting" manufacturing operations to Third World countries to avoid the high costs of worker and environmental protection standards in the United States and other industrialized nations, according to a study released

The five-year study by Barry Catleman, a Wash-ington-based chemical engineer, whose research has been financed by environmental groups, organized labor and Congress Office of Technology Assess-ment, was released by Rep. David Obey, D-Wis. He described it as "probably the first major examination of the export of hazardous industries" and said it pointed to a "potennally serious and growing problem with which neither American nor international agencies are prepared to deal."

The study finds that the "flight from regulation" is either in progress or just around the corner in industries including asbestos products, arsenic, zinc, mereury, benzidine dyes and pesticides.

In many industrialized countries, these sectors have been required to install expensive equipment to reduce pollulants and protect workers from toxic elements, some of which bave been found to cause cancer. Rather than pay the cost, the industries have moved to less-developed nations where such rules are minimal and "poverty and ignorance make communities...quite vulnerable to the exploitation implicit in hazard export." the study says

"By the next decade," the study said, "the export of hazards from the U.S. to Third World countries is likely to increase. Banning of unsafe consumer products, foods, drugs and pesticides here has often led to the subsequent export of these products. Similarly, U.S. pollution-control laws and occupational health standards may soon lead to wholesale exodus in major industries, as manufacturers move to avoid the large costs imposed here while continuing to sell their products in the United States."

Moreover, some finished products are returned dury-free because the new host countries get preferential tariff treatment, giving them a competitive edge over U.S.-produced goods manufactured here under costly protective regulations, the study says.

the research found U.S. asbestos-textile imports have "soared" since regulations were imposed. One firm, Amatex, closed a Pennsylvania plant in 1973, and by 1974 "imported" about 2 million pounds of asbestos textiles from Mexican-horder plants it owned, roughly one-fourth of U.S. imports of asbestos textiles for that year.

Mr. Castleman said Mexican law calls for protective equipment and the posting of hazard warnings, but imposes fines of no more than $90 for violations compared with maximum U.S. fines of $10,000.

In an interview, Mr. Castleman said the United States could help control "hazard exports" by revoking tax creditsS. fines of $10,000.

Miller Sees 4% Growth In 1st Half

Consumer Spending To Support Growth

WASHINGTON, June 29 tAP-DJ) - U.S. real annual growth for the gross national product in the first half of 1978 will likely average about 4 percent, showing that the "underlying momentum of the expansion appears to have been well-maintained. Federal Reserve Board chairman William Miller said today

He told the Joint Economic Committee that growth prospects remain favorable and that consumer outlays and business spending "should provide support for further expansion of activities.

He said surveys indicate that consumer confidence remains generally high, although there has been some recent moderation. He had favorable reports for husiness outlays for both inventories and fixedcapital goods. He said the U.S. for-eign-trade position should also lend moderate support to the economic expansion but added that demand for imports, including oil, is likely to remain quite high.

Separately, Fed Board member Henry Wallich has formulated a 8point plan of his own for controlling U.S. inflation.

The plan is different from Mr.
Miller's eight points for a "model He calls for:

 Slowing down the economy to annual growth of 3!4-to-3!2 per-cent; Mr. Miller does not call for a specific target.

Reducing the administration's proposed fiscal-1979 tax cut to $10 billion from the $15 billion it has indicated it will accept.

Working to reduce the budget deficit for fiscal 1980 to less than $40 billion, a target that agrees with Mr. Miller's.

 Trimming monetary growth
 "levels commensurate with the real growth rate of the economy."

 Promoting competition and productivity through changes in the antitrust and tax laws. Maintaining "as strong a dol-lar internationally as our balance of payments will permit."

 Providing tax incentives to hold down wages, a favorite topic of Mr. Wallich.

By Donald Woods, Paddington Press, Librariated, 288 pp. 819105 Reviewed by Joseph Lelyveld

EVEN to bis own black country-men. Siephen Biko was better politics could not be permanently circumscribed. known in martyrdom than in life. His death, several months before his 31st hirthday, ended a brief political career, half of which had been spent under a "banning" or der that made it a crime for him to deliver made it a crime for him to deliver made it a crime for him to deliver a speech, be quoted in print anywhere in South Africa, or sit in a room with more than one person.

Despite this - and the general prohibitions on black politics in South Africa — this young black man could still be seen as a threat to the inviolability of the white state. By now, the inhumanity of the members of the security police who left him naked, shackled and comatose on the floor of a prison cell requires little amplification. What's less obvious is the tribute to him as a leader of his people that was implicit in their loss of control. their surrender to fear.

Surely they meant to break him, not kill him, Hoving banned Ste-phen Biko and held him incommunicado, they could hardly have intended to give his name the internutional currency it achieved as a result of his death. But white South Africa is willing to pay a price for the belief or illusion that the rule of law still limits the power of a security police empowered to hold its prisoners indefinitely and without

It may be a police state for those who don't play politics according to apartheid's peculiar code, but what other police state would allow the kind of self-exposure that South Africa endured at the time of the Biko inquest? It's not really re-markable that the dead man's interrogators went unpunished. What's remarkable is that in the course of that travesty, they faced devastating cross-exemination in open

To this quirk or throwback in the South African system we owe Don-ald Woods's "Biko." a hurriedly put together tribute and protest hy a liberal white South African editor who - heing banned himself, had to flee the country to get it puhlished. The chilling record of the inquest takes up nearly one-third of Woods's book, which is less a book in any literary sense then an annotated source book on Biko's life and death. The death may have been what caught and momentarily held the world's attention, but the discovery to be made in these pages is that the real and lasting importance of Biko was in his life.

The meaning of that life can be simply put: Biko was a free black man in South Africa, Apartheid, if it had worked as its architects had shoped and intended, would have made such a figure impossible in his generation. Having suppressed-all black political movements and locked up their leaders, the white authorities calculated that they had won the time they nex nel hlack aspirations to the tribal "homelands." But Biko, growing up in the taut and cerie stillness of that period somehow liberated himself, salvaging something beyond outrage — a sense of history and a tenable political stance. Infunatingly for the authorities, his very existence was proof that real black Biko first gained notice as a student leader under the banner of Tolack consciousness. urging black students to invest no hope in liberal whites, Liberals were well-meaning crough but they had, he remarked once, "this prob-lem you know, of superiority." Biko had read his Franz Fanon, studied his country and concluded that blacks had to discover their humanity on their own.

The separatism he preached mus! have seemed at first to the authorihave seemed at first to the authorities to be a wondrous fulfillment of apartheid theory. But then the security police realized that Biko was talking about black rule over the whole of the white patrimony, talking about it not as a dream but as an inevitability for his own generation. "Eventually," he said, with a confidence and aplomb that were more threatening than default more threatening than defiant. "any white society in this country is going to have to accommodate black thinking. We are mere agent? in that history."

Woods's treatment of his black friend amounts to a panegyric. If Biko ever had doubts, divided feelings, fear or anguish, we don't learn of it here. The devotion with which The portrait is drawn reflects im-mense credit on Woods but little. light on its subject. Yet it is a valuable book because Woods was wise enough to our Biko's major statement into the record be was assembling. The most telling of these happens to be a 43-page excerpt from testimony in a treason trial the year before he died. The wit, scope and mental vigor he manifested on the witness stand - the only place in his country, after all, where he was then entitled to speak for the record — make credible the claim that Woods asserts for Biko as "the personification of an unmense new force at the forefront of black politics in South Africa."

The hig prize winner on Broaday last year was about dying and us season we have had "Cold torage," which the critics also pplauded. Its subject is aptly de-ribed by the title. All this occurs t a moment when educational urus are urging curricula that acuaint the young with the facts of eath right along with the facts of ne multiplication tables, and it is idely acclaimed as healthy.

Maybe it is, although in my expeence things that are widely aclaimed as healthy usually turn out be bad for you. I remember then they used to say sunshine. lenty of milk and eggs and a good hick steak were healthy. Now they ay they're all terrible for you.

Dying, of course, has always een an important dramatic activiy, but it is usually fitted into other ntertaining events. Aeschylus, ihakespeare, John Ford, Warner Brothers - all the giants had peoale dying in droves, but these peo-ale didn't just sit around for two nr hree hours waiting to die, as peosle do in the new style.

Dying, let's face it, is a very ordiary activity. As Tolstoy illustrated n "Anna Karenina," it can even recome unbearably tiresome on the seemed in beli undience — Kitty and Levin in the folstoy book — if not necessarily it in a big way.

This spate of entertainments about the humdrum of dying probably reflects the disappearance of the old entertainment moguls. By moguls. I refer to studio heads like Louis B. Mayer, Harry Cohn and Sam Goldwyn, who were always referred to in the Hollywood copy as "moguls." The word became so firmly attached to Louis B. Mayer that I have always thought of him as Louis B. Mogul.

None of the moguls would have put up with anybody on the lot who wanted to make a movie about people sitting around waiting to die. With showmen's instinct, they knew that death was ordinary and. hence, had to be elevated into a hig moment when it was used. Occasionally, though very rarely, it was necessary for a star to die at the end of the show. When this had to happen, the death scene customarily took as long as an afternoon at "Die Walkure" and often, in the final want to and offer in the final shot, the deceased star would be revivified up in the clouds doing something vital.

When Cecil B. de Mille was compelled to kill Gary Cooper as Wild Bill Hickok in "The Plainsman." he didn't shrug it off with a quick fade-out. He sent in Jean Arthur for a long bout of weeping, made Gary's eyelids flutter in a close-up, then closed with a beautiful shot of Gary up in the sky driving a team of horses hitched to a wagon with Jean Arthur beside him. How Jean got up into the clouds is a question that had never bothered me until this very moment, such is the power of a really good mogul.

There is a story of Louis B, Mayer flying into a rage after seeing footage of an Andy Hardy scene in which Mickey Rooney, as Andy, was praying for the life of his ostensihly dying mother. The director had shown Andy standing at Mother Hardy's bed in prayer. "When Andy Hardy prays, he gets down on his knees," Mayer is said to have screamed. The scene was reshnt. Andy got down on his knees. Mother Hardy recovered. If you dealt with death. Mayer seemed to believe, you didn't handle it as an ordinary event, you did

The Purveyors to British Pageantry

By Willa Petschek

ONDON (IHT) - At nine o'clock one recent morning a chauf-L feur-driven Rolls drew up at Moss Bros of Londoo and out stepped a distraught-looking gentleman wearing only a pair of hlue-

Inside the shop he told the assistant that his house had been hurlater he specified and all his clothing stolen. A quarter of an hour later he specified out again, equipped from head to foot.

But Moss Bros, specializing in tailoring, secondhand clothing and, most notably, clothing for hire, can do much more than turn out thousands of impeccably dressed husinessmen. Wedding gowns for hrides, robes and regalia for a Knight of the Garter, a uniform for a construct sense. governor general, a costume for Her Majesty's Swan Keeper or for a new Gentleman of the Black Rod, hairy tweeds for deer stalking, the latest and snappiest ski outfit — Moss Bros can supply them all from the vast hank of tin boxes and wardrobes spread over two acres of Without Moss Bros, British pageantry wouldn't be the same. At Queen Elizabeth's coronation, many an impoverished earl and viscount, unable to scrape up £1,250 for a peer's velvet-and-ermine robes, hired them from Moss Bros for £25 for the day. Total coronation rental orders, including uniforms, coronets, swords and decorations, ran into the thousands.

Great Day

During the ceremony an eminent peer turned to his African neighbor. "What a great day for the queen," he said. "Yes," replied the African representative. "And what a great day for Moss Bros!"

The firm also provides most of the gray top hats and morning coats worn at Ascot, royal garden parties and Epsom on Derby Day. Says Harry Moss, chairman of the firm and great-grandson of the founder, "The test of where a man gets his morning dress is to look at the fit. If it fits, we got it for him. If it doesn't, he inherited it."

Moss Bros customers have included Dwight D. Eisenhower, Ger-ald Fard and Nelson Rockefeller, as well as Winston Churchill. Har-old Macmillan and Harold Wilson, Muhammad Ali, Cary Grant, Robert Mitchum and scores of other celebrities.

The original Moss was bearded Moses Moss, who in 1860 began selling secondhand clothing from a cart near Kings Cross. His sons helped him and he never tired of impressing on them his num business rule: to sell only good quality things. As the business prospered, Savile Row suits, ordered then rejected by fussy customers, plus the wardrobes of decreased or distressed acrossments busely a purchase. wardrobes of deceased or distressed gentlemen haught at auction became a large part of the firm's stock.

When Moses died, his sons moved to their present address and became Moss Bros (the firm disdains the use of a period and pro-

A turning point was reached in 1897 when a bankrupt stockbroker entered the shop and asked in borrow a suit of tails. His nwn were in pawn, he said, and he needed some for the parties where he boped to earn a living singing comic songs. Moss Bros obliged — for a small nightly fee. Thus began what soon became the largest and most re-nowned renting service in the world.

Until the early 1920s the trade was chiefly professional entertainers, and a certain social stigma was attached to renting clothes. When the first Labor government was formed in 1924, most of the ministers lacked the £73 (by today's standards £350) for the court clothes required for calling on King George V. The king's private secretary rescued them with a letter pointing out that "Moss Bros. a well-known and dependable firm, have in stock a few pairs of Household Second Class Levee Dress with trousers, coat, cocked hat and sword from £30 complete."

By 1925 hired clothes were regularly seen though not recognized at Ascot and Buckingham Palace garden parties. Then a royal garden party was rained out, and 50 rain-drenched men arrived simultaneous nenusly at Moss Bros to return their court dress and change hack into suits. The staff froze at the sight of so many secrets being spilled. But it was a hilarious hour. While the men squeezed into the changing rooms, their wives sitting on counter tops chatted and laughed. The stigma of renting was ended.

The stigma of renting was ended.

Today ready-to-wear accounts for 50 percent of the firm's husiness, 40 percent is rental and the rest secondhand. Customers can choose from a gigantic stock offering some 400 styles and sizes in striped trousers alone.

On an average Monday morning 2,000 outfits are returned to the London office (the firm also has 38 provincial branches).

One in 10,000 customers forgets to empty the pockets. Moss Bros has found money, keys, glass eyes and false teeth. A vase nearly a foot high was sent back in a top hat, half-a-pound of hutter (going rancid) was discovered in a pocket while a bulge in a tailcoat turned out to be an alarm clock carried by an overanxious best man.

Returned garments are first furnigated, then hrushed, then "spotted" (the 10-man spotting team claims to be able to tell sherry stains from beer stains at 20 feet and can whisk them out in 40 seconds), then cleaned and pressed before being put back into service. The firm has a right to charge for repairs — cigarette hurns do the most damage. damage - hut rarely does,

Among the other customer services: Saddles from the saddlery department are sent to riding schools to be broken in for new nwn-ers, a salesman will squirt a hose over a new raincoat to prove it is ers, a salesman will squirt a hose over a new raincoat to prove it is waterproof, while under the firm's buy-back scheme a bride who prefers to own her own dress for the wedding (Moss Bros offers a choice of 1,500 bridal gowns) can sell it back to the shop next day for half price to go into the hire department.

In addition to bridal gowns, winner can hire everything from a ballgown (£8.50 and up) to a hiara and a mink cape. The firm has found that many warmen would rather hire eight different gowns a season than appear eight times in the only one they own. Records are kept of each hiring to ensure that no two dresses of the same design will turn up at the same function.

Moss Bros clothes are sent all over the globe. Their hiring department includes the largest collection of military uniforms in the world, and during World War II they kitted out 50,000 Allied officers of all

The firm never turns down an order be it a suit for an African customer 6-feet-9-inches tall with a 60-inch chest, 50 bowler hats for Copenhagen department store (which turned them upside down and put geraniums in them for a window display) or 100 fur coats for a trade delegation going to Russia.

Perbaps their favorite order arrived by cable from Hong Kong:
"One suit for Chinese gentleman." Moss Bros asked for details and was told, "They don't matter. We want to bury him in it."

Strange as it may sound. Richard Burton has been accused of leaving behind a yacht, not what well would call a small and unnationable item, last February when he and his wife packed up and ended vacation in Puerto Vallaria, Mexico. The South African National Theater has been notified by Golda Meir, former prime minister of israel, that she opposes the produc-tion of "Golda," the William Gib-son play based on her life, for all-white audiences only, Mrs. Merwho shares the playwright's royal-ties, said in Tel Aviv that she had agreed that the play could be shown in South Africa only if it could be seen in theaters open to all races. The play is to open next month in Pretoria, but Yitzhak Unna, Israel's ambassador to South Africa, and diplomats from several other countries have said that they will not attend the opening because of the exclusion of hlacks. The play will be performed later in Johan-nesburg before a mixed audience.

Jane Russell, the 57-year-old actress, will complete a four-day jail sentence Friday. Miss Russell, who lives in Montecito, a suburb of Santa Barbara. Calif., began the term Monday when a judge re-voked probation after her arrest on a charge of drunken driving. She had been put on prohation in 1970 after a conviction for driving while intoxicated. Last March, after a traffic accident, she was arrested and charged a second time. The actress, who now appears in television commercials, was seen in many films, including "The Outlaw" and "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

Follow-up: The theft trial of Kitty Milinaire, the Iranian-born daugh-ter of the Duchess of Bedford, has ended in London with her acquittal on charges of stealing jewelry val-ued at $400,000 from Cartier's. Mrs. Milinaire, who told the court
